Tryst Coffee House

There was a huge uproar when a Starbucks landed in the heart of the independent-minded Adams Morgan with the big corporation domino effect theory being espoused by all the locals. But really, it's just an alternative, and a not very cozy one, to the better, more comfortable Tryst. A long-time Adams Morgan institution, this coffee shop/eatery/ late-night hangout offers great coffee and free wireless. On any give day or night the place is filled with college students or computer consultants, friends catching up, and the late night crowd gathering for a last drink. Tryst looks like Good Will's furniture warehouse with a crowd, and the service can be spotty, but the food is really good, and their happy hour begins when the doors open.
